Executive summary

The 2009 reaccreditation site visit team recommended that the school "rededicate itself to provide the support and mentoring necessary to convert the promise of greater scholarly activity to reality, particularly among younger faculty members."

The SJMC heard the message loud and clear. It created an environment that encourages research and creative production, as well as collaborations among faculty members.

- The school hired 11 new full-time faculty with PhDs or other doctorates, resulting in a significant increase in scholarly output. The number of faculty-authored refereed journal articles has increased in the past six years to 72, along with 27 articles, 131 refereed conference papers and 27 articles non-refereed publications. The faculty has become active in conferences and presentations with more than 200 such activities.
- Three assistant professors were awarded tenure and promotion in 2013 and were granted tenure largely based on the quality of their research. They were the first assistant professors to be granted tenure at the school in over 20 years. One of this cohort recently received the university’s highest award for excellence in research, and another one of the cohort received the highest award for excellence in engagement.
- New hires are typically granted course releases and graduate assistants in the first three years of their careers, in order to help them establish a research agenda and achieve their academic goals toward tenure.
- Academic and professional faculty are working together on high profile research and creative projects, such as the award-winning sea level rise/climate change project, which has both academic and popular media components; and award-winning social marketing operations and stigma reduction campaigns of a county-wide children's mental health initiative.

Please respond to each of the following instructions:

1. Describe the institution's mission regarding scholarship by faculty and the unit's policies for achieving that mission.

SJMC researchers receive encouragement from FIU, which emphasizes research as a major component in the university's mission. FIU is Carnegie-designated as both a research university with high research activity and a community-engaged university. Research at FIU focuses on addressing scientific challenges, as well as the social and economic needs of Florida and the nation. FIU faculty produce research that is linked to local economic development and problem solving, as well as broader concerns.

The FIU Division of Research supports the university's research mission by providing leadership in research administration, supporting the endeavors of the University's research community, and ensuring the responsible stewardship of research activities.

SJMC faculty are internationally recognized scholars and professionals who create new knowledge that contributes to understanding and solving community and global issues. They are expected each year to make research and scholarly work public in the manner generally accepted and appropriate for their discipline or profession on a continuing basis. Each chairperson is expected to meet regularly with each faculty member to discuss his or her progress in the areas of research and creative work. The dean encourages scholarly productivity through summer research grants, graduate research assistants and faculty mentoring sessions with untenured faculty. The associate dean for graduate studies and research also helps to facilitate research productivity through faculty forums devoted to grant writing and other research topics.

A key goal in the SJMC's strategic plan is to encourage and increase original academic research, scholarly and professional work by the SJMC faculty in order to enhance academic excellence and leadership. The school's plans for achieving this goal are to:

- 1) Seek sponsored research support in order to increase financial resources required to support research initiatives and research assistants;
- 2) Encourage collaborative research, scholarly and professional work across SJMC faculty as well as outside SJMC, but within FIU;
- 3) Establish and develop a network of researchers with mutual interests in order to explore collaborative research initiatives;
- 4) Actively participate in the leading national and international conferences in journalism and mass communication; and
- 5) Address issues surrounding teaching loads and budget constraints in order to facilitate increased output by faculty in research, scholarly and professional work.

2. Define the group of faculty whose work is included in this section and state time restrictions used to incorporate activities of faculty who were not employed by the unit during all of the previous six years (for example, new faculty and retired faculty).

We include in this standard the academic and professional work done by 24 of the 30 current (fall 2014) full-time SJMC faculty, including professional-practice faculty (assistant, associate and full professors) and academic faculty (assistant, associate and full professors). We excluded from this list full-time lecturers.

We include here only the work done by faculty during their time at FIU. We did not include the work done by lecturers, instructors, adjunct faculty, visiting instructors, part-time faculty, or faculty who left FIU between 2009 and 2014.

3. Using the grid that follows, provide counts of the unit’s productivity in scholarship for the past six years by activity, first for the unit as a whole and then for individuals broken down by academic rank. The grid should capture relevant activity by all full-time faculty. Provide the total number of individuals in each rank in place of the XX. Adapt the grid to best reflect institutional mission and unit policies and provide a brief narrative.

The chart uses the same metrics provided in the sample table. The “Other” category is comprised largely of conference papers and presentations that do not fit elsewhere and editorial contributions such moderating panels and creating posters. The non-juried works are tied in part to the documentaries done by the faculty.

* Co-authored work should be counted as a single publication in the unit totals, however if, for example, two members of the faculty are co-authors on the same journal article, it would be reported as a publication for both authors.

 Includes all full-time faculty who do not hold listed ranks, such as instructors and others on term appointments. Many faculty in this category may hold teaching appointments without significant scholarship, research or creative requirements.

4. List the scholarly, research, creative and professional activities of each member of the full-time faculty in the past six years. Please provide a full list; do not refer team members to faculty vitae for this information. (Full-time faculty refers to those defined as such by the unit.) If including faculty who have since left the unit, please note. Professional service activities will be reported in Standard 8.

5. Provide relevant sections of faculty guides, manuals or other documents in which the unit specifies expectations for scholarship, research, and creative and professional activity in criteria for hiring, promotion and tenure. Describe how the unit's criteria for promotion, tenure and merit recognition consider and acknowledge activities appropriate to faculty members' professional as well as scholarly specializations.

Faculty members seeking tenure have their record of research, publication or creative work reviewed as part of the tenure and promotion process. SJMC applies this policy on the evaluation of scholarship:

The School of Journalism and Mass Communication combines professional training of undergraduate and graduate students with a strong emphasis on research and scholarship for faculty on tenure-track lines. These research and scholarship activities must receive national or international professional recognition.

As such, faculty are expected to have their research published in quality, refereed journals directly related to journalism, broadcasting, advertising, public relations, or mass communication. Faculty are also encouraged to present at conventions recognized as appropriate outlets for such scholarship. Such efforts should be evaluated and recognized by one's peers. In an effort to assist faculty, the department chair will keep a list of journals, ordinarily acceptable for meeting such criteria, and the faculty will evaluate this list yearly. Because of the diversity of the field, however, no list can be considered comprehensive.

Articles published in quality academic journals not on the list or not directly related to journalism, broadcasting, advertising, public relations, or mass communication – i.e.: journals in law, politics, sociology, history, marketing, management, education, psychology, etc. – may also be acceptable for meeting research and scholarship requirements for tenure-track faculty provided the article itself is directly related to the mission of the school and the faculty member provides evidence of the journal's quality.

Eligible works of scholarship include:

- Publications
- Refereed publications
- Non-refereed publications
- Books and book chapters
- Papers and presentations at meetings and conferences
- Creative work, including artifacts, compositions, designs, installations, exhibits, performances, presentations, and productions
- Research Grants and Contracts
- Patent Disclosures, Applications, Awards
- Technical Reports and related Research Reports
- Works in Progress

Scholarship and research are referenced throughout the SJMC Policies and Procedures Manual (APPENDIX C). Excerpts appear here:

POLICY 001: Appointment, Tenure, Promotion, and Annual Evaluation

 - 2) The course work would improve the productivity of the department;
 - 3) The faculty member's work schedule can be adjusted to accommodate such job-related study without reduction in the total number of work hours required per pay period, or the faculty member uses accrued leave or takes approved leave without pay for the hours of absence.
